

Deuane Kuenzi
IBIS Airlines
Administrative VP

With over 30 years of experience in aviation, aerospace, government, sales training and management, Kuenzi possesses a particular set of skills that enable him to be uniquely qualified as the Senior Administrative Officer of Ibis Airlines. While at The Boeing Company Kuenzi was involved with the procurement of the Model 737, 727 and 747 aircraft engines and cowlings. As the procurement manager, his responsibilities involved a considerable amount of interface with the Boeing engineers and the vendors supplying the engines such as Pratt & Whitney, General Electric, Rolls Royce and Rohr Industries. Significant planning and organizing was required for these items to arrive at The Boeing Company on a specific date to enable the engines to be installed on the aircraft. Kuenzi's involvement with a very specific agency of the federal government involved the planning, implementation and analysis of operations in several parts of the world with the primary emphasis on the Americas and Australia. These operations required precision planning, information gathering and flawless execution. With over 40 operations, Kuenzi had a remarkable record and reputation for the highest quality in carrying out his assignments. In more recent years, Kuenzi has been involved with the Department of Defense in the training of personnel for the US Coast Guard, US Marine Corp., US Marshall Service, Federal Bureau of Investigations and Homeland Security. Currently, Kuenzi and his wife are involved with property management in Northern California. Kuenzi holds degrees from Pacific Lutheran University, Lewis and Clark College, The Ryan School of Finance and an honorary doctoral degree from New York University.
